Christine Apio

Email address Phone	christineapio35@gmail.com
At IOB I studied	Master of Governance and Development
Give short description of what your job entails	I had several years of work experience with mainly International NGOs, and briefly with the United Nations Population Fund in both humanitarian and post- conflict development settings. I mainly worked in the field of protection, specifically on women's protection and empowerment and adolescent girls components issues in various positions. My roles were multiples, and included programme management, assessments, coordination, research and advocacy among members. I found my job both exceptionally exciting, challenging and above all very rewarding. One thing I learnt from my experience is that development cannot be steered in isolation of the overall socio-economic and political context in a given country. A country can be in a development phase at one point in time, and gets to a humanitarian crisis another point in time, a situation likely to critically undermine development efforts.
I AM INTERESTED to learn more/ get information about ...	There are a number of issues that poses development challenges in Uganda, yet not a lot of research have been carried out so I intend to engage to some extent on researching on pertinent development challenges in Uganda to inform policy advocacy and lobbying at various levels. I also plan to engage in certain social projects as a way of giving back to my community, mainly activism and mentoring adolescent girls. As you can see, there are lots of things I intend to engage in when back to Uganda. I am also considering doing short term deployments to crisis affected areas so I can find ample time to craft, design and work on my personal projects

(Higher) education degrees before (or after) IOB studies?	Political Sciences (PhD), Demography (M.Phil), Economics (M.Sc.)
I currently work at (the name of the organisation and function)	University of Antwerp, IOB Institute of Development Policy and Management as Marie Skłodowska-Curie Postdoctoral Fellow
Give a short description of what your job entails	My research focus is gender and collective action. I study the effect of gendered social relations, norms and preferences on economic behaviour in common pool resource settings and at the intra-household level. My background in (development) economics and demography, combined with a PhD in political sciences, allows me to approach these topics in a multidisciplinary way, applying qualitative and quantitative methods, including experimental methods. Most of my work concentrates on East-Africa. I have been switching between academic research and more policy and practice oriented research in Tanzania and Uganda. This has been a deliberate choice, which allows to improve my theoretical and methodological basis and ensures my research remains relevant and useful. In Tanzania (2001-2003), I first worked with an NGO in rural development and then joined REPOA, a Tanzanian research institute, doing research on poverty alleviation. Thereafter (2004-2011), I joined the Department of Conflict and Development Studies at Ghent University and engaged in doctoral research on the way irrigation water is governed and shared in rural Tanzania. From 2011 until 2015, I lived and worked in Uganda where I conducted research on inclusive value chains, land rights for women, empowering effects of cooperative membership and intra household decision making in farming households in collaboration with local and international development organisations and research institutes. In October 2015, I joined the Institute of Development Policy and Management (IOB) as a post-doctoral research fellow. I study the impact of improved intra household decision making on the sustainability, efficiency and equitability of household farming in sub-Saharan Africa in collaboration with a development partner and an international research institute. I was recently awarded a 24-month Marie Skłodowska-Curie individual fellowship (starting October 2016) to extend this study.

I currently work at (the name of the organisation and function)	IOB, researcher/lecturer I am a lecturer based at the Institute of Development Policy (University of Antwerp). I am broadly interested in governance and conflict in spaces where the state is only weakly present, particularly in Central and Eastern Africa. My current principal research interests are the following: Public services in the Democratic Republic of Congo, with a particular focus on the traffic police and taxes 'Green criminology', and particularly ivory trade in Central and Eastern Africa. Conflict and rebel movements in the DRC and Uganda, particularly the LRA and ADF in the Democratic Republic of Congo, and conflict dynamics in Western Uganda. I am a project leader for the 'Secure Livelihoods Research Consortium' program in the Democratic Republic of Congo, coordinated by ODI and financed by DFID, focussing on public services in the DRC.
Give short description of what your job entails	I have a long-standing research interest in Uganda, and will continue to work on: - Post-conflict reconstruction in Northern Uganda (in collaboration with Gulu University and Uganda Martyrs University) - Informal cross-border trade - Urban governance (in collaboration with Uganda Christian University and Makerere University) - Ugandan politics - Conflict-related issues (LRA, ADF, and others)
